The RIAI and Safety By Design present "Safety by Design", an intensive half-day safety course designed by architects for architects. The purpose of the course is to provide Architects with a working knowledge of health and safety and the role of the designer under the construction regulations. The programme includes practical exercises to develop experience in producing the correct information to be passed onto Project Supervisors, record keeping and designing out hazards.

Cathal Mooney, MIOSH, Safety By Design:

"The course will use up to date and live case studies to highlight issues for designers when it comes to making safe design decisions".

John Graby, director of the RIAI, comments "The course explains and clearly marks the beginning and the end of the health and safety role of the designer in the building process".
